She clung to the belief that she would one day be free, and she used her strength and resilience to help others survive.

In 1945, Auschwitz was liberated by the Allies, and Eva and Inge were finally free. They returned to the Netherlands, where they were reunited with their grandmother. Eva and Inge eventually married and had children of their own. Eva has dedicated her life to sharing her story and educating others about the Holocaust. She is a tireless advocate for peace and reconciliation, and she has inspired countless people with her message of hope.
