When she was 16, Inés ran away from home. She traveled to Seville, where she met Pedro de Valdivia, a Spanish conquistador. Valdivia was impressed by Inés's courage and determination. He offered her a place in his expedition to Chile.

Inés eagerly accepted. She sailed with Valdivia to Chile in 1540. The voyage was long and treacherous. The ships were often battered by storms. Once, the ship that Inés was on was attacked by pirates. Inés fought bravely, and she helped to repel the attack.

After a long and difficult journey, Valdivia's expedition finally arrived in Chile. The Spanish conquistadors were met with resistance from the indigenous Mapuche people. The Mapuche were a fierce and warlike people. They fought bravely against the Spanish invaders.

Despite the challenges, Valdivia and his men were eventually victorious. They founded the city of Santiago in 1541. Inés played a key role in the conquest of Chile. She was a brave and skilled warrior. She also had a strong personality, and she was able to inspire her fellow conquistadors.

In 1547, Inés married Rodrigo de Quiroga, a fellow conquistador. The couple had two children. Inés and her family lived in Santiago for many years. She became a respected member of the community. She was also a successful landowner and businesswoman.

Inés Suárez died in Santiago in 1580. She was 73 years old. She is still remembered today as one of the most important figures in the conquest of Chile. She was a brave and courageous woman who played a vital role in the founding of a new nation.
