

The Epic Story of Robert Manry's Transatlantic Voyage

In 1965, Robert Manry embarked on an extraordinary journey, sailing alone across the Atlantic Ocean in a 13-foot sailboat. His story is one of courage, determination, and the power of the human spirit.

Manry was a 39-year-old engineer with no prior sailing experience when he set out from Falmouth, Massachusetts, on June 19, 1965. His boat, the "Tinkerbelle," was a tiny, open cockpit sailboat that was barely large enough to hold Manry and his supplies.
