

The Hiroshima Cover Up: The Reporter Who Revealed It to the World

In the aftermath of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, the U.S. government imposed a strict censorship on all information about the bombing. The government wanted to control the narrative and prevent the public from learning the true extent of the devastation. But one reporter, John Hersey, risked his career and his life to break the censorship and tell the world the true story of what happened.

Hersey was a young reporter for The New Yorker when he was assigned to write a story about the bombing of Hiroshima. He arrived in Japan in September 1945, just weeks after the bombing. He spent the next several months interviewing survivors of the bombing and gathering information about the aftermath.
